Devils Bend Golf Course Results April

This months results can be viewed on http://sundayleavepass.com/

The mention of playing at Devils Bend conjures up visions of fire and brimstone, an uninhabitable scorched baron wastelands, and extreme temperatures. Well if that is the case then they obviously got the name wrong for this golf course. Perhaps they should call it HEAVENS BEND, because "Lord" knows it can rain in the Mornington Peninsula, Jesus Christ!!!! it never stops. Apparently Noah was going to build the Arc at HEAVENS BEND, but he figured out that there was no point since the long term weather forecast was that it was going to rain for more than 40 days and 40 nights, in fact from what I have seen it hasn't stopped raining in Mt Martha since God invented the rain button in 01AD.

For the third year in succession the HEAVENS BEND golf course produced drought breaking conditions, and the repercussions were some very disappointing scores right across the board. In fact even this month's victor was unable to play to his handicap and a Nett 73 was enough to secure 15 championship points.

It is rumored that HEAVENS BEND is the only golf course known in the entire world where the groundskeeper has a hover craft in the shed so he knows that he can get around no matter what the conditions are likely to be. If you think we are joking have a look in the careers section of last weeks AGE. They were running an Ad for a new course superintendant for the Devils Bend golf club, and under special requirements the ad said, previous greens keeping experience, first aid certificate and also life guard qualification is a must.

Obviously the previous greens keeper must have drowned or resigned because they certainly could not have grounds to sack him, as the course itself was in fantastic condition. Despite the constant deluge of water, the greens were the best I have ever played on, the bunkers (that weren't flooded) were in great condition and the lies in the fairways and even the rough could not be complained about at all.

Having said that, as could be expected there no shortage of H2O around the place and the water hazards, managed to play a major role for the day. Poor Adam Cooper unloaded an entire box of brand new balls into the dam on the fifth hole. Whether he was trying swing too hard in an effort to win the longest drive or just out of practice can not be conclusively determined but what can be guaranteed is that he will never get a vote for leather wedge since he counted every shot and posted a 10 over par 15 for the hole. To make things even worse for Adam, he was partnered up with Jeremy who was only too happy to laugh at his expense and even offered to buy him a snorkel and mask so that he could keep his eye on the ball.

Adam wasn't the only one to fall victim to the fifth hole, under torrential rains and cyclonic gusts of winds, the hole proved to be a tough challenge for everyone. Runar also scored a 15 on the same hole; in fact the best score was a 6 by both Brendan & Dale and the majority of the rest of the field posted scores of 8 or worse. The conditions were so extraordinary that it was amazing to watch a couple of balls that originally appeared to be safe and lying just in the rough off the fairway, were suddenly inundated with a flash flood which left David Jeans and Stu Coops wading up to their ankles to play semi submerged golf balls from the newly formed dam.

As quickly as the rain blew in, it disappeared again, and there were occasional bursts of blue skies and sunshine which stayed around long enough to dry your hands and clothes before the next downpour arrived. Looking at the score-cards it was pretty easy to identify where the weather turned ugly because it correlates perfectly with the holes where everyone had a shocker.

Runar managed to continue the poor form that he displayed at Yarrambat; he dragged himself around the course like a lost puppy. Perhaps the problem with his golf is he gets homesick, after all he did spend approximately 3 hours and 17 minutes of the 5x hour round talking to his wife and kids on the phone. They heard about every shot he played as it happened, (which there were many) he called his wife while putting out on the 14th hole to order his dinner and he was even was on the phone comforting and instructing his beloved while she had to changing a dirty nappy, which really gave his playing partners the shits while they were made to wait for him to finish.

Perhaps the name SUNDAY LEAVE PASS is lost by definition when you spend so much time calling home. The only time Runar didn't have the phone stuck to his ear on a family on conference call was when he dropped it after he fell down the bank of one of the bunkers on the 11th hole. Apparently he slipped in the mud on the lip of the bunker, spun 360 degree's then flipped arse up, and landed face first in the wet sand. It took him 10 minutes to clean the grit from between his teeth and spit the sand off the back of his tongue, but no sooner had he done so, he called wife Michelle to tell her what had happened to him and let her know that he had some dirty clothes for her to wash when he got home.

Tony Grasso was also caught talking to his wife on the phone, but admittedly he had a little better excuse than Runar. Unfortunately for Tony a tidal surge swamped his golf bag, water logging his keys and wallet and malfunctioning his car alarm remote control in the process, therefore when he arrived back in the car park poor Tony found himself marooned in the at HEAVENS BEND with a car that would not start. While everyone else was sitting around enjoying the responsibility of "Raising a glass for the Anzacs", Tony was doing battle with a screw driver, paper towel and a drowned circuitry board. Although he boasted to everyone that he had successfully reprogrammed the car alarm with a MacGyver style repair, Tony Junior was quick to correct him and let everyone know that Mum had driven all the way to Mt Martha with the spare remote so that he could get the car started

Big Mick finally cracked it for a longest drive this month, on what proved to be the most difficult hole on the golf course. Despite belting his drive so far down the fairway that he turned the long Par 5 into a short Par 4 Mick still was beaten by the inclement conditions and was unable to capitalize on the advantage he had given himself.

Rick Turnicovic followed up his back to back 10's with a perfectly played birdie 2 on the 8th Hole setting him up for the opportunity for a massive skins haul. A big Jackpot could have been his only salvation for the day but unfortunately even that was taken away from him when Chris Sfiligoj rolled in a 6x meter putt from off the fringe of the green to also score a birdie.

David Jeans was having plenty of trouble just getting the ball rolling. Dave was a big contributor to the fine jar with a couple of shots that failed to get passed the ladies tees, and one shot that never moved passed the Men's tee but fortuitously for him the ladies markers were positioned behind the men's markers on that hole. Dave could be a candidate to take over the title of angry man, this year. With the super-coach out seemingly retired, Dave displayed a few traits that could earn himself a few votes for the Mark Sfiligoj perpetual Angry Man award title.

comments from this months round to be used in the newsletter

Here's a version of what Big Al experienced on Sunday, and you might note the consistency of the stories, proves that everything you here is the honest truth, no matter how far fetched it may seem.

Stu,

Runar and myself left on Sunday without dropping in our score cards as we were too embarrassed to show our faces in public.

What a comedy of errors it was for the entire day.

If we had to give out fines I think our group would have to take a mortgage against each of our houses.

Runar kept us fully entertained with 3 balls in the water (with his forth not quite going in the water but then his next shot actually going in the water!), hitting somebody elses ball, falling over into the bunker at the 10th green after a complete 360 and face plant into the sand, ordering cuts of meat on the phone to his wife while playing a bunker shot, and hitting numerous shots with his sons cut down wedge that is about 2.5ft tall. Ironically I think his 2 year old son could have played many of the shots with a lot more purpose then then Runar managed with the "mini wedge"

I hit 1 ball into the water on the exact same hole. I'm sure the Devil Bend golf course has never heard so many foul words spoken in a 4 hour golfing session. Especially when I had the "hot" putting streak of the following midway through my round 3 putt, 4 putt, 4 putt, 3 putt in a row on holes 13, 14, 15 & 16. It's a great feeling when your putting score for 18holes is actually bigger then all other shots put together (NOT)

Too many "didn't pass the ladies to mention"

At least we were all amused.

The only positive for the day was standing up the fairway in an area which we thought was out of reach to stand and watch Big Mick smash his ball around our legs and then walk up as if he was just about to catch a wave at Jan Juc without a care in the world.

Great to see.

Handicaps

As to be expected a tough day at the office meant only one player scored within the Buffer zone of their handicap. Brendan's handicap remains unchanged whereas every one else get's 0.1 shots for next months adventure. As has been mentioned in previous correspondence we will continue to use the old system until the start of 2011 season although we will keep the website updated with what your projected handicap is likely to be under the new Slope handicap scoring system. Congrats to Tony Grasso who starts his handicap at 21.3, perhaps a little generous considering he has such a technically perfect swing and consistent game.
