Having 4x putts	$2-00

IMPORTANT NOTE: The guys who played the wrong golf course owe $9-00 to the fine jar each, which is a fine of $1 for each hole that they played incorrectly. A very generous penalty considering they should technically been disqualified from the comp.

There were few guys this month who failed to meet the golf payment deadline. REMEMBER failure to pay your golf fees on time incurs a $5-00 fine so the end of year golf trip BBQ is looking even better since there is another $15 worth of quality meat destined for the hot plate thanks to the ever increasing food and drink kitty.

Before we get into the results, a bit of administration.

Congratulations or commiserations, (depending on which way you look at it) to Jarrett Drake who became the proud father of a new baby “Lily Grace” during the month. We all wish you and the family all of the best with the new addition and we look forward seeing you for your return comeback game in 2015.

However a few of the guys have rebirthed the idea, so I will get a costing and a design sample and order a vest for Gerard, Steve Powne, Jamie Brunton, Brendan and Myself. If there is anybody else that may be interested, this is the last chance for you to let me know. You can express interest by replying using the link provided or email to: studaydream@gmail.com

Yes I am interested in a vest

Rosebud Golf Course Results July

I'm not sure whether it was the early start to the morning, the long cold drive in the rain, or whether everyone was tired and grumpy after staying up all night to watch Cadell Evans take out the Tour De France. Whatever the cause, the effect was, there were plenty of candidates putting forward a strong case to be nominated for the "angry man award."

Although it is a beautiful golf course, Rosebud has never been a happy hunting ground for most players. Paul Blizzard arrived at the car park vowing he had a score to settle with the Rosebud layout. Unfortunately it was more a matter of DeJaVu and the course got the better of him yet again. All of his built up expectations were soon enough, just shattered dreams and by the time he dragged himself off the 18th green he was a wreck of a man and was last seen seeking solace from the bottom of a beer can.

Although defeated and dejected at least Paul managed to keep his emotions in check which is more than we can say for a few others. The 2008 and 2009 angry man award winner proved that married life has done little to curtail the ferocious inner beast within him. The supercoach's form slump continues to spiral downward and as could be expected his temper got the better of him before the end of the day. After three stuffed shots in the one bunker and losing the longest drive title to of all things a straight drive by Stu Coops, one of Fil's golf club was seen travelling at a high velocity and low trajectory. The club allegedly covered more than 100 meters in the air before coming to rest in a garden bed. Had it not been for the Groundskeepers prize azalea bush, the 5 iron would most likely have been retrieved with an altered shaft angle.

Fil may have been fortunate not to break his golf club after his little throwing tanty, but Rick Turcinovic was not quite so lucky. After a few good rounds over the past few months, Rick has grown accustomed to a higher performance level and he now has higher expectations of himself. Consequently he was not too happy to have things go astray at Rosebud. Early in the round the all too familiar catch call of “You filthy goat fondling prick!!!!” could be heard echoing across the fairways. However by the 16th hole and after his second 15 for the day, he could no longer suppress his anger and the harmless verbal tirades turned physical. Luckily for his playing partners it was his driver and a concrete tee plate, which bore the brunt of his aggressive outburst and not them. If you had ever wondered what would give way first “a solid concrete tee marker” or “state of the art latest model metal driver head” Rick has the answer for you. Rosebud Country Club now has a slightly scratched tee marker but the lifetime no cave-in guarantee on the Driver he purchased in January is now Null and void. The club was last seen in the bin at the back of the 18th green with a 4 inch fracture running almost the entire length of the rear of the club. Incredibly despite the damage to the head Rick persisted to use the club for the last 2 holes, before retiring it permanently to the golfing gods.

Tony Grasso wasn’t much better behaved than Rick and the Supercoach, his clubs were regularly seen slipping out of his hands and flying in all directions around the golf course, what’s more the local Italian vegetable farmers were horrified to hear the garbled expletives coming from Tony’s mouth especially since it was in their own native tongue. With a hot head and a foul tongue, Tony could be a strong candidate to take out the end of year angry man title this year.

Based on consistency and repeat performances there would be a valid and justified reason to nominate Mr Grasso as the angry man for 2011, however to vote for him would all be in vain since the prize has been pretty much wrapped up based on a single performance by a player on his maiden game with the golf club. Our newest inductee, for those that didn’t get to meet him was a chap by the name of David Hopkins and David is or was an angry man. Most guys didn’t bother to introduce them self to David during the bar session in the car park for fear of what he might do to them while he had a drink in his hand. Grant Maize could definitely vouch for the fact that Dave is an angry man and you definitely don’t want to get in his way while he has a drink in his possession.

A Tale about Dave’s Day

The day started off just a little shaky with the first drive in 6 months slicing off into the trees but a beautiful Iron shot over the river and onto the green set up a very makeable birdie or par opportunity. 3x putts later a little spark began to ignite in the back of his eyes. 3x putts on the next hole and a 12 on the par 5 fifth hole and the spark in the eyes started to burn white hot and the hairs on his ears began to sizzle as Dave grew a bit more hot under the collar.

On the 8th hole an ill directed chip saw Mr Hopkins climbing into the abyss of one of the many beautifully sculptured bunkers around the Rosebud layout. Anxiously he adjusted his footing, feeling for the depth and coarseness of the sand “This is my first bunker shot in 7 years” he mumbles as he prepares to splash the ball up and out onto the green. There was an explosion of dirt, a grunt and a groan, but there was little movement of the ball and it remained in the trap. “This is your second bunker shot in 7 seconds” was the cheeky reply from his playing partners “Aren’t you glad you didn’t wait so long your second one.”

By the time he had hit almost every tree on the 9th hole, accumulated another big score and nearly decapitated a group of Hoity Toity members playing off from the first tee of a separate golf course, the ears on David's head were smoking, his eyes were blood shot red, his knuckles were white as choked his golf club into submission and David was starting to shake uncontrollably as the anger brewed inside him.

It was a matter of what ever could possibly go wrong would go wrong, and to make things worse, Stu Cooper was having a day out. It appeared that all day during Stu's round, lady luck would save him. Stu got some delightful lucky breaks, whereas in similar circumstances Dave seemed to cop the raw end of the deal. In Mr Hopkins eyes Stu was the luckiest man on earth, "His ball would go into the tree land on a birds back, and then the bird would then fly down the middle of the fairway and drop the ball on the green." Was how he recounted one of the so-called fortuitous events of the day? According to David "Another time a gopher saw Stu's ball rolling towards the bunker so it dug a trench to stop it from going into the hazard, then aided by a swarm of bees carrying honey on their legs, the gopher and the bees pushed the ball back in to the middle of the fairway." Now don't get me wrong, I might have got a couple of good bounces from the occasional tree, but I do think Dave might tend to stretch the truth just a little, and he seems to exaggerate the facts, just to make a good story.

By the time the 13th hole arrived Dave was like the Eyjafjallajökull volcano fuelled with unimaginable forces building up inside, smouldering, stirring and ready to blow. Dave hit a good drive which finished in an un-repaired divot from a player from the group in front. Stu on the other hand hit a giant hook, which bounced off 4x tree's, rolled into the pouch of a small kangaroo, which then hopped off onto the adjoining fairway where it was abducted by an alien space craft which rejected Stu's golf ball and threw it back to earth where it landed believe it or not on a 2cm high ant mound right in the middle of the 15th fairway with a clear shot into the green.

Dave was somehow able to extricate his all out of rotten lie and his ball rolled up onto the green where it perched proudly on top of one of the many undulations of the green. Finally a smile crossed past his lips, and it appeared as though things were starting to get better. Meanwhile from over on the other fairway Stu hit his ball back through the trees and his ball finished 5 or 6 meters from the front of the green with two cuts of fairway and rough to negotiate.

Suddenly some 3 or 4 minutes after it came to rest on the green, a worm broke the surface of the earth directly under poor Dave's ball. The force of the dirt being dislodged beneath it applied just enough force to generate some movement and from then on gravity and the fast running greens took over. The ball rolled off the steep slope of the green and came to rest some 10 meters away from where only seconds before it had been proudly perched on the putting surface.

To make matters worse Stu Coops then sidled up to his ball and elected to putt the remaining distance from off the green, and confidently asked Steve Powne to mark his ball. Rather than to use a coin or a ball marker like most people would, Steve opted to uses a golf tee to mark the location of his ball on the green. What happened next was just a modern miracle. To cut a long story short, Stu overcooked his putt and it was heading for the back of the green, on its journey it managed to hit Steve's golf tee flush in the middle. The ball then slowed down, re-routed its direction and rolled gently into the bottom of the cup for a Birdie 3.

The accumulation of entire day's frustrations got the better of Dave. His eyes glazed over, he screamed like a wounded banshee and then ran at Stu a like a mad man possessed. As he got with in range he threw his Gatorade bottle. Suddenly, there was a loud thud, a crash and then there was absolute silence. Poor unsuspecting Grant Maize had walked straight into the middle of the impending collision and he bore the full force of the Gatorade bottle in the right ear and temple. He fell to the ground Brent Staker versus Barry Hall style. He lost consciousness for a few seconds, and when he came too, he did so with a throbbing head and ringing in his ears. Had it not been for the tea cozy head warmer beanie that he was wearing the impact would have been even more brutal and the damage more significant. After a concussion test and a few deep breaths, Grant was able to regroup all of his faculties finish the hole and complete the remainder of the round, although the conversations with his brother in law for the rest of the day were a bit restrained to say the least. It certainly would have been an interesting time around the dinner table on Sunday night when they both got home to tell their wives about there first day on the golf course together.

Although there were a few lucky breaks for Stu around the course, not everything went his way. His putting was off by a couple of mm and his ball refused to drop in the hole. Stu lipped out time after time, after time. He putted like he was the “Gynecologists’ apprentice.” If you are wondering what this analogy means it is as simple as this “he spent the entire day shaving the lips, so close, but could not get into the hole.”

Ben Nichol took pride of place at the front of the pack and led his group of Greg Breasley and John Mea off from the first tee. Armed with the latest form of modern mobile phone golf app technology, Ben was showing off how great his program was. He told them both how lucky they were to be playing with him because he had a GPS map of the course at his fingertips and he also showed them how he could measure the distance of each hole, track all of their scores, count putts, work out stableford points, find out how far the nearest bunker was etc, etc.

You can imagine how exciting it all was for Ben who makes his living out of tracking things. His business is logistics so on a daily basis he needs to make sure everything is distributed to the right place at the right time and he needs to know that anything can be traced at the drop of a hat if it is needed to be found. So imagine the disappointment Greg and John felt when they discovered that despite the GPS tracking device, the latest Rosebud golf course maps, and the “you beaut” scoring device Ben actually managed to get them lost. In fact he took them so far in the wrong direction that the played the wrong back nine entirely and they could not be found for more than 2 hours. The boys ended up on the wrong course and were creating havoc by intruding into the middle of the elitist Rosebud Country Club Exclusive Private Members competition. The members were not very happy to have Eastern suburbs riff raff on their golf course and told the boys to F#@! O## in no uncertain terms, and they definitely weren't amused when Ben had the audacity to ask them if they needed in product tracking equipment for their businesses.

A snap committee meeting after the round chaired by Greg Breasley himself determined that getting lost and playing the wrong golf course is worthy of the maximum fine payable therefore Ben, John and Greg are all owe $10 for their antics with the $30 going towards Eye Fillet steaks for the end of year BBQ. Thanks boys.

It was great to finally see the long awaited return of Jamie Brunton, as one of the co-founders of the club and one of the longest serving members his absence around the traps his been the topic of much discussion around the esky. Several blokes were surprised to see that Jamie hadn't actually grown two heads and moved to Tasmania to join a cult, as some of the rumor circulating had suggested. After nearly a 2x year lay off from the game, Jamie's fluid, silky swing showed little sign of rustiness. Without even a single practice swing he stood up on the first tee and caressed his ball long and straight down the middle of the fairway as if he had been playing every week. Jamie's stroke play was absolutely flawless; his only downfall was that he struggled with touch on and around the lightning fast Rosebud greens. A few wayward chips across from one side to the other, a fist full of 3 and 4x putts were all that separated him from the glory of a legendary comeback to the game and a top 10 finish.

Congratulations to Mick Harper, who appears to have taken a real liking to the Rosebud golf course. He coasted around the layout, shooting 41, 41 for an 82 off the stick. Nett 72 giving him a second successive monthly title and therefore reign in a few points on Dale's large championship points lead. Dale had his worst event for the year finishing in 7th position. SOS finished in 2 spot behind Mick Harper, on a count back from Grant who managed to stagger to the end of the golf course despite his temporary loss of consciousness for a Nett 73. A very generous 40 handicap elevated David Hopkins into 4th position, although we will watch on with interest to see if Grant will actually want to invite him back again or the other possible outcome is he might land a job with the New York Yankees as the lead in pitcher, because he can certainly wind up & chuck a powerful fast ball.

Congratulations to Neil Philips who actually made it to the golf course this month, after more no shows than the upcoming Amy Winehouse world tour, Neil Finally made it to the first tee to hit a golf ball. Evidently his appearance was guaranteed only because Phil Plane and Rick did an intervention abduction and dragged him out of the Rosebud hotel at 930pm and then tied him to the mattress of his onsite apartment so that he could not get into the minibar. Neil was rewarded with a top 5 ranking. His round included a birdie and a few pars and he was clear headed and without a hangover for the first time on a Sunday Morning in 40 years.

The remainder of the field struggled to negotiate the testing fairways and treacherously fast greens.

The Rosebud final scores were as follows:

Mick pulled back 7x shots back on Dales lead but it is going to take consistent successive victories if he is to have any chance of winning the Championship trophy and even then it will only be dependent on what sort of scores Dale is posting. So the really the outcome is totally in the hands of Dale Robinson.
